

Universal Declaration of the Right to Sell Cannabis

Preamble

Acknowledging the historical, medicinal, and cultural significance of cannabis across various societies worldwide. Recognizing the need for an ethical, sustainable, and regulated framework for the sale of cannabis that respects individual rights, promotes public health, and ensures the safety of communities. Considering the potential economic benefits of the cannabis industry, including job creation and revenue generation, when operated under a legal and regulated system.

Acknowledging the importance of rectifying past injustices related to cannabis prohibition, which disproportionately affected marginalized communities.

Emphasizing the need for international cooperation to establish common standards for the responsible and equitable sale of cannabis. We, therefore, proclaim this Universal Declaration of the Right to Sell Cannabis as a common standard to guide the development of fair, safe, and regulated cannabis markets.

Article 1: Right to Legal Commerce

Individuals and entities have the right to engage in the legal commerce of cannabis, subject to regulations that ensure public safety, product quality, and ethical business practices.

Article 2: Right to Fair Regulation

Cannabis commerce shall be subject to fair, transparent, and evidence-based regulations that ensure safety, prevent abuse, and protect against illicit trade while promoting a competitive market.

Article 3: Right to Non-Discrimination

No individual or entity engaging in the legal cannabis market shall be discriminated against based on race, gender, sexual orientation, religion, or social status.

Article 4: Right to Access and Participation

All individuals and communities, especially those historically marginalized or adversely affected by cannabis prohibition, shall have equitable access to participate in the cannabis industry.

Article 5: Right to Education and Information

Consumers and the public have the right to accurate, comprehensive information about cannabis products, including their sources, contents, and potential health effects.

Article 6: Right to Innovation and Development

The cannabis industry shall have the right to innovation and development, including the cultivation of new strains, product development, and adoption of sustainable practices.

Article 7: Right to International Trade

Under mutual agreements and respecting international laws, entities have the right to engage in the international trade of cannabis, promoting global economic development and access to quality products.

Conclusion

This Universal Declaration of the Right to Sell Cannabis sets forth a vision for the responsible, ethical, and regulated commerce of cannabis that respects human rights, promotes public health, and contributes to economic development. It calls upon nations, communities, and individuals to work together to implement and uphold these principles, ensuring a just and sustainable future for cannabis commerce.

This declaration serves as a guiding document for policymakers, businesses, and advocates as they navigate the complexities of establishing legal cannabis markets, aiming to create a balanced approach that benefits society as a whole.
