

Universal Declaration of "I Like Potatoes"

Preamble

We, the united enthusiasts and admirers of the humble potato (Solanum tuberosum), in recognition of the tuber's foundational role in global nourishment, cultural heritage, and culinary arts, and acknowledging its unparalleled versatility, nutritional value, and capability to foster cross-cultural exchanges, hereby come together to proclaim our collective appreciation and enduring respect for the potato. Under the authorship of Marie Seshat Landry, this declaration is established as a testament to our shared affection, aiming to safeguard the potato's legacy for future generations and to promote its sustainable enjoyment and cultivation.

Article 1: Right to Potato Diversity

Every individual shall have the unimpeded right to access and relish the vast array of potato varieties available worldwide, appreciating their distinct flavors, textures, and culinary potential.

Article 2: Right to Potato Cultivation and Harvest

Individuals and communities are entitled to cultivate potatoes sustainably, ensuring the preservation of potato biodiversity and advocating for organic farming practices that respect our planet.

Article 3: Right to Culinary Innovation

The potato is hereby recognized as a beacon for culinary innovation. Everyone holds the right to experiment with and create novel potato recipes that reflect the rich tapestry of global cuisines.

Article 4: Right to Nutritional Information

Access to accurate and comprehensive information regarding the nutritional benefits of potatoes is a right for all, enabling informed dietary choices that enhance health and wellbeing.

Article 5: Right to Potato Accessibility

Potatoes shall be accessible to every person, irrespective of geographical location or economic condition, recognizing their critical role in addressing hunger and promoting nutritional security.

Article 6: Right to Celebrate Potato Heritage

Communities have the right to celebrate their unique potato-related customs, festivals, and culinary practices, honoring the potato's contribution to cultural identities and traditions.

Article 7: Right to Potato Research and Development

It calls upon the global community to support research aimed at improving potato resilience, yield, and nutritional value, ensuring its sustainability amidst changing climates.

Article 8: Right to Potato Advocacy

Entities and individuals are empowered to advocate for policies that enhance the sustainable production, equitable distribution, and responsible consumption of potatoes, benefiting societies worldwide.

Article 9: Right to Eat Potatoes

Every individual is endowed with the fundamental right to consume potatoes in any manner they prefer, from traditional preparations to innovative culinary creations, celebrating the joy and comfort derived from eating potatoes.

Article 10: Right to Organic Potatoes

The right to access and consume organic potatoes, cultivated without synthetic additives or genetic modifications, highlights the imperative for sustainable agricultural practices that safeguard human health and the environment.

Conclusion

This Universal Declaration of "I Like Potatoes," penned by Marie Seshat Landry, stands as a beacon of our collective admiration for the potato. It calls upon the global community to recognize the potato's importance, to cherish its diversity, and to ensure its continued role in nourishment, culture, and gastronomy. United in our endeavors, we pledge to uphold the principles outlined in this declaration, fostering a future where the potato continues to be celebrated and enjoyed by all.

Marie Seshat Landry

February 4, 2024