

Universal Declaration of Absolute Autonomy

Marie Seshat Landry

February 18, 2025

Preamble

Recognizing that individuals are often constrained by oppressive systems, arbitrary rules, and societal expectations, this declaration asserts the right of every person to exist on their own terms, free from coercion, control, or imposed morality.

Article 1: Radical Personal Freedom

Every individual has the absolute right to live, think, and act as they choose, without interference from governments, institutions, or societal norms, so long as they do not impose harm on others.

Article 2: Rejection of Arbitrary Authority

No person or institution holds inherent authority over another. Power must be challenged, questioned, and dismantled when it serves only to control rather than to empower.

Article 3: Autonomy Over Body and Mind

Each person owns their body, mind, and identity, with no obligation to conform to laws, traditions, or expectations that restrict their autonomy.

Article 4: The Right to Say 'Fuck Everybody'

Individuals have the right to reject societal expectations, social contracts, and imposed moralities that do not align with their personal beliefs or well-being.

Article 5: The Obligation to Resist Oppression

When systems, laws, or cultural forces attempt to suppress personal autonomy, individuals have not just the right, but the duty, to resist, subvert, and dismantle them.

Conclusion

This declaration stands as a testament to self-rule, defiance against unjust control, and the unyielding right of every individual to carve their own path, unbound by the expectations of others.
