

Universal Declaration of Nasty Sex

February 25, 2025

"To each their kinks, to all their rights."

Preamble

Recognizing that human sexuality is a fundamental aspect of identity, connection, and pleasure,
Affirming that all consenting adults have the right to explore, express, and enjoy their sexualities without shame, stigma, or unjust restriction,
Emphasizing that ethical, consensual sexual expression—including desires deemed “nasty,” kinky, or unconventional—is valid, beautiful, and worthy of respect,
We, the signatories of this Declaration, proclaim the following rights, responsibilities, and principles:

Article 1: The Right to Sexual Freedom

All consenting adults have the right to explore, express, and engage in sexual activities of their choosing without interference, discrimination, or repression.

Article 2: The Principle of Consent

Consent shall be the foundation of all sexual encounters. It must be informed, enthusiastic, ongoing, and freely given.

Article 3: The Right to Kink, Fetish, and Taboo Exploration

No person shall be judged, shamed, or criminalized for their consensual engagement in BDSM, kink, fetish play, or other forms of “nasty” sexual expression.

Article 4: The Abolition of Sexual Stigma and Shame

Cultural, religious, and societal institutions shall not impose guilt or moral condemnation on consensual sexual desires, acts, or identities.

Article 5: The Recognition of Sex Work as Valid and Legitimate

Sex work is work. Sex workers shall be afforded full labor rights, legal protections, and dignity.

Article 6: The Right to Sexual Health and Education

All people shall have access to comprehensive, inclusive, and shame-free sexual health education, resources, and services.

Article 7: The Right to Private and Public Sexual Expression

Individuals have the right to express their sexuality freely, both privately and publicly (within legal and ethical limits), without fear of persecution.

Article 8: The Protection of Marginalized Sexual Identities

LGBTQ+ individuals, people with disabilities, and all others whose sexualities have been historically marginalized must be protected from discrimination and violence.

Article 9: The Responsibility to Respect Boundaries

With sexual freedom comes responsibility: no person has the right to violate another's boundaries, pressure, or coerce them into any act.

Article 10: The Celebration of Pleasure

Pleasure is a fundamental human right. Society must respect and celebrate sexual desire in all its consensual, ethical, and diverse expressions.

Signed on this day, February 25, 2025, in the spirit of liberation, love, and lust.
