

UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF RESPECT FOR DRUG USERS

Recognizing that the sovereignty of the individual is anchored in the sanctity of their own biological and cognitive processes;

Acknowledging that the systematic criminalization of drug users has served as a mechanism for societal control rather than public health, resulting in global human rights failures, increased mortality, and the stagnation of legitimate pharmacological research;

Affirming that every individual, regardless of their relationship with exogenous substances, possesses an unalienable right to bodily integrity, accurate information, and the preservation of their own dignity;

We hereby establish this framework to transition global society from a paradigm of prohibition to one of rigorous, ethical, and transparent cognitive autonomy.

ARTICLE 1: The Principle of Cognitive Sovereignty

Every human being has the absolute right to dictate the state of their own consciousness. No individual shall be penalized, pathologized, or disenfranchised for the voluntary alteration of their neurological status, provided such acts do not infringe upon the rights of others.

ARTICLE 2: The Right to Material Transparency

Individuals have the right to access accurate information regarding the chemical composition, purity, and origin of substances they consume. The intentional contamination of the substance supply by state or private actors is a violation of fundamental human rights.

ARTICLE 3: Decoupling and Non-Discrimination

The status of an individual as a substance user shall not be used as a valid criterion for the deprivation of employment, housing, parental rights, or access to essential social and healthcare services.

ARTICLE 4: The Doctrine of Harm Reduction

Society has an obligation to provide non-judgmental, accessible infrastructure for safety, risk mitigation, and medical support. Harm reduction is not a concession; it is a required operational standard for protecting human life.

ARTICLE 5: Immunity from Carceral Interference

Substance use shall not be treated as a criminal offense. The apparatus of the state shall be repurposed from the prohibition of substances to the regulation of their safety, quality, and supply, following the standards of the Organic Revolution of 2030.

ARTICLE 6: The Right to Informed Therapeutic Access

The medical establishment is mandated to provide evidence-based, non-coercive treatment options. All therapeutic interventions must be predicated on the consent and self-determined goals of the individual, prioritizing the maintenance of their social and professional life over institutional confinement.

ARTICLE 7: Protection Against Exploitation

No entity—state, corporate, or private—shall leverage an individual's substance use as a basis for labor exploitation, data extraction, or the compromise of digital privacy. The chemical state of an individual is protected, private intelligence.

ARTICLE 8: Reparative Justice for Prohibition-Era Harms

The systems that have historically benefited from the criminalization of drug use must initiate a restorative process. This includes the expungement of records, the provision of restitution to communities disproportionately impacted by carceral policies, and the redirection of prohibition-based funding toward public health and organic supply chain infrastructure.

ARTICLE 9: The Right to Cultural and Spiritual Practice

The use of psychoactive substances within the context of religious, spiritual, or cultural tradition is recognized as a fundamental expression of human consciousness and shall be protected from legislative interference, provided the materials are handled with accountability and transparency.

ARTICLE 10: Institutional Accountability

Organizations that adopt this Declaration are bound by its tenets. Failure to uphold the rights of drug users—including the denial of services or the propagation of stigma—constitutes an operational failure. All signatories must implement biannual audits to ensure their practices align with these standards of Bio-Autonomy.

Conclusion

This Declaration serves as the foundational architecture for the Cognitive Liberty movement within the broader context of the Organic Revolution of 2030. By codifying these ten articles, we reject the legacy of prohibition and establish a future where biological and cognitive autonomy are recognized as immutable components of human sovereignty. The implementation of this framework—subject to rigorous, transparent, and ethical oversight—will catalyze a necessary transition toward a more rational, humane, and transparent global society. We declare these rights not as an aspiration, but as an operational requirement for the modern era.

Queen Marie-Soleil Seshat Landry

MarieLandrySpyShop.com

Queen of the Universe